Hazardous Beauty

Hazardous Beauty

The thick black smoke rising from the burning trees, dust particles polluting our air, ash and fumes, hazy skies, low visibility. All this will again become a problem when the haze comes to blight Malaysia again in the coming months. The haze makes us all vulnerable and brings disastrous effects to the environment and wildlife; no matter if it is a result of man's negligence or greed.

But I believe that the haze can inspire new thoughts and feelings, inducing deeper sentiments that evolve other ideational and emotional responses.

Can we agree that some degree of aesthetic insight lies in the unbearable haze? Can the charred remains of burned trees be considered as aesthetic artefacts if placed in the system of an art gallery? Can the unsettling yet beautiful pattern of burned and unburned landscapes be considered as art?

One sure thing that arises from these ongoing tragedies that is not easy for me to deny or ignore is the beauty in the ugliness of haze..... "The Hazardous Beauty".
